Were dogs involved in WW1?

Many dogs served their country in WW1. Because dogs were hard working and trusted some of their most vital roles included: carrying medical equipment, keeping wounded men company and laying telephone cables. Sometimes dogs, who kept wounded soldiers company were used as mascots. Arguably the most famous dog in WW1 was sergeant Stubby who won loads of medals and was in lots of medals and even got promoted to sergeant.

Overall animals had vital jobs in WW1. Throughout the war animals carried medical equipment and artillery bravely for the soldiers. We should notice animals more and they should be treated differently and should earn more medals.

Generally horses were used to carry guns or supplies and some were even for. Soldiers to fight on. After the war they were sometimes sold to farmers or butchers who would kill them. One of the most vital roles were carrying supplies to the front lines.

What did pigeons do during WW1?

Pigeons were really good at sending messages and were really hard to shoot down because they went 50 miles an hour and humans would die in a second. Pigeons were very reliable and 95% success rate. Over 100,000 pigeons were used to deliver messages. They were sent from trenches and from tanks.

What would we do without horses?
